Cease-Fire Is Set Again In Lebanon

BEIRUT - Moving to prevent a new Lebanese civil war, the gov-ernment of President Elias Sarkis called the 16th cease-fire in five days Sunday to halt a Syriah-Christian military showdown in which more than 150 deaths had been reported.

A presidential palace spokesman said Syria's peacekeeping forces, the Lebanese Army and rightist Christian milities of the Phalange Party had agreed to stop shooting in Beirut and in the Roman Catholic city of Zahle, 33 miles (53 kilometers) east of the Zahle by Syrian forces had halted.

The state radio said joint patrols were being formed from Syran and Lebanese troops to "police and consolidate the cease-fire." But officials did not sound optimistic about the prospects that the cease fire would hold.

Israeli radio said the continuing violence was a major topic of dis-cussion between Prime Minister Menachem Begin and U.S. Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr., who arrived Sunday in Israel on his tour of the Middle East.

Mr. Begin's Cabinet met before Mr. Haig's arrival to discuss the events in Lebanon. Foreign Mimster Yitzhak Shamir said that Israel; which regularly raids Palestinian perrills positions in southern Lebanon, would not "sit idly by with folded hands and watch the massacre of Lebanese civilians."

Government sources in Beirut said the United States and France were bringing diplomatic pressure on all parties involved to stop the

The sources said the government was apprehensive that continued fighting - between the Syrians and Phalangists in Zahle and between the Syrians and the Lebanese Army in Beirut - would invite Israeli military intervention.

Mr. Tueni, the UN ambassador, was quoted in the English-language Lebanese weekly Monday Morning as saying, "I think we've never been nearer to partition in Lebanon than we are today."

Mr. Tueni, in Lebanon to take part in efforts to end the fighting, said the fighting between the Syrians and the Lebanese Army had "gravely croded the credibility" of the Syrian force. He proposed replacement of the Syrians with a mixed peacekeeping contingent from Arab countries and the UN.

The underlying problem — which Mr. Haig has not yet en-countered in full — was stated by the former Israeli foreign minister. Abba Ehan, in a radio interview. Meanwhile, Peking policy-makers, alarmed by doubts and hostili-ty created by their recent cancellation of major industrial projects, are seeking to reassure the West that retrenchment means both readjustment and contimity in economic relationships. But more questions than an-

Israel Said to Ask U.S. Compensation for Saudi Arms

By Bernard Gwertzman New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - Israel has asked the United States for an outright gift of an additional 15 F-15 fighters as well as access to an American spy satellite to compensate for the Reagan administration's planned sale of advanced military equipment to Saudi Arabia, according to administration and Israeli sources.

The U.S. military relationship with Saudi Arabia and Israel has become complicated by a possible arms race that seems to have been set off inadvertently by an American desire to build up Saudi defenses against a possible Soviet-backed threat.

A stated goal of Secretary of State Alex-ander M. Haig Jr.'s current mission in the Middle East is to encourage Israeli and Arab leaders to put aside their local con-cerns and to concentrate on the overall strategic threat to the region that he believes is posed by the Soviet Union.

Mr. Haig has talked of trying, in time, give it to them as a gift. to produce a "strategic consensus" among the states stretching from Egypt to Paki-was in Washington in February, the Is-

Last Thursday, officials disclosed that the administration had tentatively decided to sell Saudi Arabia five highly ndvanced AWACS (Airborne Warning and Control System) surveillance planes, each costing more than $400 million.

Additional Equipment

In addition, the administration plans to sell Saudi Arabia equipment to incre the range and firepower of the 60 F-15 Eagles already purchased and due to be delivered beginning next year.

The Israelis, who have 25 F-15s of their own, and the right to buy 15 more, have been offered an additional 25 F-15s by the administration to compensate for the Saudi sale. But the Reagan administracion wants to sell the equipment to the Israelis on concessional loan terms, and not to States since they already were repaying this country at the rate of more than $700 million yearly.

The Israelis receive $1.4 billion yearly in military aid, but of that amount only $500 million does not have to be repaid. The administration has offered an additional $300 million in credits in each of the 1983 and 1984 fiscal years.

The possibility of the Saudis having their own AWACS planes has led to a major campaign against the deal among Israel's supporters in the United States. In Israel. Mr. Haig is sure to hear arguments that such planes would endanger Israel's security and expose its military operations to the Arab world, because of the planes ability to monitor events more than 250 miles away.

A memorandum outlining some of Isra-el's ideas on bow the United States could offset the Saudi sale has been circulated to administration officials and members of priority," it states:

• The F-15s that Mr. Haig offered Mr. Shamir in February "should be provided on a grant basis."

 Because of the additional equipment for the Saudi F-15s and the Israeli withdrawal from the rest of the Sinai in April, 1982. "Israel needs real-time intelligence data and improved surveillance." This could include, it said, "a mix of satellite and ground station, surveillance aircraft and ground radar, or providing Israel with full and equal access to a United States satellite over the area."

 Any Arab state, such as Saudi Arabia, that is able to buy U.S. arms must support the American-sponsored peace process in the Middle East. "The United States must take specific and clear steps to persuade Saudi Arabia to cease its politi-cal, financial and rhetorical opposition to a directly resoluted peace between Israel and its Arab oeighbors," the group said.

The United States should have a per-

The memo also calls for the United States to position equipment in Israeli bases in the Negev region and to allow Israeli companies to compete for overhaul and maintenance contracts in the region. A side issue of potential importance is whether U.S. troops would participate in a peacekeeping force in the Sinai once Israel withdraws from the final parts of that re-gion a year from now. Mr. Haig reportedly will affirm to Israel and Egypt the U.S. willingness to contribute up to half the force level of between 2,000 to 4,000 men.

But the United States, to case Egypt's concerns, is agreeable to making an all-out effort to find other countries to take on the assignment first. The Egyptians, fearful of other Arab countries' reaction, only want the Americans in the Sinai as a last

Reports Say Generals In Bonn Oppose Cuts than half the aircraft involved were

BONN - West German generals have protested against a series of planned cutbacks and delays in procurement that they say will af-fect the long-term West German role in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and endanger troops in some situations, according to a published report

Another report said that the West German air force is currently taking 114 aircraft out of full service and cutting down on pilot training hours in an additional effort to save money. The accounts were published over the weekend. with the details involving the air force cuts appearing in oewspapers closely linked to the Social Demo-

There were no denials of the reports from the Defense Ministry. instead, a spokesman described the account of the air force reductions as exaggerated and referred questioners to a recent statement by Gen. Jurgen Brandt, the inspec-tor general of the armed forces, maintaining that West Germany could continue to fulfill its NATO obligations despite the announced cancellation of some programs. The officers contradicting Gen.

Brandt were named as the inspector general of the air force, Gen. Friedrich Obleser, and the army's inspector general, Gen. Hans Peoppel. Verbatim accounts of their official, written objections to the cutbacks were published by the conservative newspaper Die Welt.

Key Timing

The objections appeared to have been leaked now to receive maximum attention through the arrival in Europe of U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger for a meeting of NATO defense minis-Wednesday.

The air force, according to the account of Gen. Obleser's statement, can continue to "substantially participate" in its NATO tasks, but its transport capacity in the 1990s would be reduced and its cooperation with other NATO air forces would be hindered by insufficicot cominand and control and communication systems.

Gen. Obleser spoke of weaknesses and risks that will di-minish the contribution of the armed forces to the other NATO

Cuts planned in missile systems designed for the protection of air bases would have "very direct ef-fects on the entire NATO de-fende," he said.

Gen. Peoppel was quoted as saying that the continuing failure to procure anti-tank weapons for night fighting meant that "in dark-oess, units without defense against tanks could be rolled right over."

Other procurement delays, he said, meant that there would be continuing situations, notably in terms of the use of old tanks, in which qualitatively inferior equip-ment would have to be employed.

The reductions in the air force's equipment were reported to result in removal from service of 44 transport sircraft. SOME years ago, reviewing a novel by Robert Coover, Wilfrid Sheed said that "oot to read it because you don't like baseball is like not reading Balzac because you don't like boarding houses," t bring this up because I am entirely innocent of racetracks. And yet: Not to read Dick Francis because you don't like horses is like oot reading Dostoevski because you don't like God, or not reading Faulkner because you don't like corn on the cob. Baseball, boarding houses, racetracks, God and maybe even corn on the cob are subcultures. A writer has to have a subculture to stand up on.

Francis is back with his 22d mystery oovel. We have met his reluctant bero, or at least a variation of him, many times before. Philip Nore is a 30-year-old loner, a jockey who spends more time around borses than around people. People will burt him. He thinks like this: "I thought that life itself was pretty pointless, but I

He also thinks like this: "Survival for so many years had been a matter of accepting what I was given, of making myself useful, of being quiet and agreeable and on trouble, of representations of the second sion and introversion and self-control, that I was oow, as a man, fuodamen-tally unwilling to make a fuss or

He will, of course, be loud and disagreeable, cause trouble, make a fuss and fight. He will also fall in love. He will be goaded into these activities by a dead photographer, a weeping wid-ow, a wicked grandmother, an unknown sister, an ambitious poblisher, a gassed lawyer, a dealer of dope, an unscrupulous owner of horses and a sense of honor. Meanwhile, we will read about arson, blackmail, child abuse, murder, Jesus freaks and horses, not to mention bomosexuality and ammonia. What distinguishes "Reflex" from other Dick Francis fictions is its multitude of plots, all of them connecting, as if the artist were a spider with galactic aspirations for the latest web. What distinguishes Philip from previous reloctant heroes in Dick Francis fictions is that he is as much a photographer as he is a jockey, and we learn as much about developing film as we do about the

A camera, Philip tells us, is "your shield. Keeps yoo a step away from the world. Makes you an observer. Gives you an excuse not to feel." Perhaps. Certainly, in the movies of Antonioni and the oovels of Jerzy Kosinski, the darkroom is as important as boarding houses were to Balzac and the bull was to Hemingway. "Reflex" enthralls. FRANKFURT - John McEnroe won his second straight tennis tournament Sunday by defeating Tomas Smid of Czechoslovakia, 6-3, 6-2, in the final here.
McEnroe, who defeated Bjorn

Borg last week in Milan, had no trouble with Smid, who was unseeded and reached the final after a series of upsets.

For the victory, McEnroe was awarded $35,000 of the $175,000 in prize money. Later, McEnroe teamed with Vitas Gerulaitis in the doubles final, but the pair lost to Brian Teacher and Butch Walts.

Woman Steers Oxford to Victory

LONDON - Sue Brown coxed Oxford to an easy

eight-length victory over Cambridge Saturday in the 127th university boat race down the Thames.

Brown, a 22-year-old, 92-pound chemistry student, saw her crew lead from start to finish and win the four-mile, 374-yard race for the sixth successive year, a feat it last achieved in 1895.

Brown, the first woman to compete in the race, was presented with a handful of apples by a five-year-old boy after the race. She passed up an opportunity to sip some champagne.

Asked about the possibilty of taking part in next year's race she said, "I'll be available for the trials, but I don't know whether they'll pick me." Fellow crew member Richard Emerton had no doubts. "She coxed off superbly." he said. "She really is very good."

Cambridge's coach, Graeme Hall, said: "Simply,

Oxford went into the sead from the start, building a 2½-length lead by the mile mark and coasting to victory by eight lengths in 18 minutes, II seconds.

The Dark Blues mastered a rather choppy course in chilly, cloudy weather, and Cambridge never had a chance. Oxford spuried into the lead in the first 100 yards and had clear water over the Light Blues within 90 seconds.

Oxford easily handled a spell of chorpy water in the first mile, and by Hammersmith Bridge, almost 2 miles, was four lengths ahead. In smooth water near Barnes Bridge, Oxford had widened the gap to six lengths and Cambridge looked tired and well-beaten.

Oxford has now won 58 races. Cambridge 68, with the 1877, race the only one to finish a dead-heat.

Matchmaker at the 1964 World Series

New York Times Service NEW YORK -- Herb Shultz, who has been quoted in this space before, is a gentleman and angler whose heart belongs to the St. Louis Cardinals. The attic of his home in Kingston, N.Y., is a treasure trove that compares favorably with Fort Knox, containing score-cards of every Cardinal game Herb has seen since childhood, pendant of the childhood, pendant of the childhood, pendant of the childhood. nants, World Series rain checks and countless other memorabilia more precious than emeralds.

Though spring comes slowly up his way, a mere glance at the calendar can prod Herb under the fifth. dar can prod Herb under the intinrib, "mixing memory and desire," as T.S. Eliot put it, stirring again the hope that will not die. Maybe, just maybe, Whitey Herzog can put it all together this year, and with Darrell Porter behind the plate and Bruce Sutter ornamenting the bullpen—.

"It has been a long gray string of years since the last pennant in 1968," Herb writes, "but we have good memories to warm us. I have a story about one of those earlier Ken Boyer's grand slam and the baseball part, it has a beautiful redhaired girl and some romance and a 99.44 percent happy ending.

Brung Up Right

"If there is anyone in 20th Century America more of a St. Louis Cardinal fan than the late Sam Breadon, it is my son Herb Jr. He was brung up right. Herb was only two years old — too young to remember - when the Cards won in 1946. But he lived and died for the team during his Little League and teen-age years, when the Cards weren't pennant winners, shoul-dering the scorn and contumely of his Yankee and Brooklyn friends By the early 1960s he was in col-

He had met this redhaired girl at the place we go in the summer

The girl's mother liked Herb. Herb's mother like the girl. But this is not the era of family-arranged marriages, and though the mothers pushed, pushed and pushed, they were getting absolutely nowhere. It would take an evine of impresse magnitude, to bring immense magnitude to bring them together.

Brand New Experience

"In September of 1964, when the Cardinals swept past the Phil-lies to win their first pennant in 18 years and went into the Series against the Yanks, I sensed the moment of truth had arrived. I got the mamas together and spoke something like this: 'It's nothing arrived to the way to the thing like this 'It's nothing like this 'It's nothing like this 'It's nothing arrived to the way way was the way. against you - you've tried your best - but forget about it. I'm taking over.

T bought tickets for the three-game set in Yankee Stadium. Both game set in Tankee Stadmin. both kids were in college, and the only game they could make was on Sonday, Oct. 11. They came into Kingston the night before, and we left about 8 a.m. to drive to the stadium in what Ring Lardner would call our 'costly Buck.' It was a beautiful day — brisk, sun-ny, clear, with a fall chill in the air. We arrived, the three of us, in time to watch the Cards take batting practice. This was all a brand new experience for the redhead. She was agreeable, a bit bemused, and interested. The Yankees were leading, two games to one, before the Sunday game, thanks to Mantle's ninth-inning home run the day before. And they took a 3-0 lead in the first inning Sunday, knocking Ray Sadecki out of the box. It looked as though the Series was down the drain. But Roger Craig, may his name be ever blessed, came in from the bullpen and steaded the

from the bullpen and steaded the ship, and we moved through the early and mid immings into the sixth mailing by only liner runs.

As I write, I'm kooking at the scorecard I kept that day, having just brought it down from the St. Louis Cardinal Lyceum located in our attic. It says, 'Official Program 50 cents' on the cover and I wouldn't sell it for $50. Carl Warwick, pinch briting, led off the sixth with a single. Cart Flood singled to right. Lou Brock flied out. Then Dick Groat hit to Bobby Richardson, who bobbled it, filling the beses. Here comes Boyer. the bases. Here comes Boyer.

Goose Pimples

"We were sitting in the perfect scale to watch it. Between home and first base, with a full sweep of the plate, the base runners and the far-off leftfield stands. Boyer took one pitch, then slammed the sec-ond, and I can feel the goose pimples yet and see the ball riding high out there in the late October sunger, and I imped the remead and Herb imped her, and I'm sure she decided right then and there that this kind of ecstary was too good to miss in life, although the subject was not formally discussed until somewhat later on.

"We all sat down, knuckles clenched, for another three and a balf innings until the game was over Final score, 4-3. It was by all odds the turning point of the Series, which the Cards went on to win in seven games.

"Not long afterward they were engaged, and soon after that they were married. Today they are liv-ing happily in Niskayuna, N.Y., still rooting for the Cardinals.

Pirates, Yankees Call Off Trade

By Jane Gross New York Times Service

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. — After more than 20 hours of tele-phone conversations, the New York Yankees and the Pittsburgh Pirates failed to work out a restructured trade satisfactory to the teams and to Bowie Kulm, the ioner. As a result, Jim Jason Thompson becomes a Pirate.

The original deal, which fol-lowed by a half-hour the California Angels' trading of Thompson to Pittsburgh, was vetoed by the commissioner Wednesday because one part of it exceeded his guideline that cash transactions between teams not exceed $400,000. According to a spokesman in the commissioner's office, the Yankees were to have sent the Pirates Spencer, two minor league pitchers and $850,000 for Thompson, with $450,000 carmarked to pay Spencer's salary for the next few years.

Once that deal was vetoed, the teams began negotiations, which broke down on Friday. First, though, the Yankees and the Pirates agreed on a package involv-ing eight Pittsburgh players — in-cluding Thompson and six minor leaguers -- for Spencer, Greg Cochran, Fred Toliver and a similar amount of cash; this time with the $450,00 directed toward the purchase of the minor leaguers' con-advised the commissioner that the minor league players in question were not worth $450,000.

Then, in an attempt to substi-tute Yankee players for cash, the Pirates asked for Gene Nelson, the 20-year-old righthanded pitcher who has virtually assured himself a spot on New York'a major league roster with a 1.80 earned run average this spring. Spencer will remain a Yankee, and

"It just got to be too much," said George Steinbrenner, the Yankee owner. "It meant stripping myself of a player I consider my future. If Nelson comes on and does a job for me, and Spencer too, I'll know that sometimes the trades you don't make are the most important ones."

was no reason to think that the Pimore cash than the commissioner's guideline allows, were trying to dismantle their chib. It was to prevent such dismantling that Kuhn created the guideline in 1977, after the Oakland A's had sold Paul Lindblad to the Texas Rangers.

Both Steinbrenner and Bergesch pointed to the recent deal between the St. Louis Cardinals and the Milwankee Brewers in which the Brewers paid Ted Simmons $750,000 to agree to be traded to them. Although Steinbrenner insisted he felt no bitterness toward Kuhn, he wondered why a player can be paid such a sum as part of a trade, when a team cannot

Different Circumstances

The Yankees-Pirates deal is the latest of several that have fallen through in the last five years as a result of intervention by the commissioner. The year before Knhn established his unwritten guide-line, he vetoed Oakland's $1.5-million sale of Vida Blue to the Yankees, and $1 million sales of Joe Rudi and Rollie Fingers to the Red Sox. Charles O. Finley challenged Kuhn's vetoes in federal court, but the judge ruled that the baseball owners, however unwisely, had in fact given the commis-sioner such jurisdiction:

tended no protest of Kuhn's latest qualifications for judging baseball talent. "Why does baseball do these things?" Steinbrenner asked. Why does baseball take a controller and make him the administrator of baseball?"

New York Times Service LOS ANGELES - Harold J. Smith, the boxing promoter who disappeared in January amid allegations that he was iovolved in a $21.3 million fraud against Wells Fargo National Bank, has been ar-rested by federal agents on a charge that he knowingly made a false statement in a passport appli-

Smith, the chairman of Muhammad Ali Professional Sports Inc., known as MAPS, was taken into custody Saturday near the Los Angeles police academy in the northeastern part of the city.

John Hoos, an FB1 spokesman, said that Smith was scheduled to be arraigned before a U.S. magris-trate Monday. Hoos declined to discuss the bureau's investigation of Smith or the details of the allegedly false statements in the assport application.

GREENSBORO, N.C. — Larry Nelson shot a 3-under-par 69 Saiurday and survived a strong challenge from Mark Hayes, his good friend and playing partner, to re-tain the lead after three rounds of the Greater Greensboro Open golf tournament.

Nelson, who got off to a slow start on the tour this year, was at 10-under-par 206 after 54 holes, and held a one-stroke lead over Hayes, who fired a 4-under-par 68 in the third round over the windy 6.984-yard Forest Oaks Country Club Course. Five shots off the pace was Lee

But he insisted that it was a lawfully obtained debt incurred under his line of credit. He added that he had no idea what happened to the $21.3 million that Wells Fargo has said is missing.

Smith asserted that soon after he decided to go into hiding a group of armed men, whom he took to be FBI agents, had tried to arrest him in Sacramento. He said he and his wife and son escaped by hitching a ride in a passing vehicle.

There have been indications that Smith may also have been under surveillance in recent weeks. He and his attorneys have contended that they have been followed by men in automobiles and vans and that there have been high-speed chases in which Smith evaded pursuing cars.

On Saturday, federal agents refused to say if they had had the missing boxing promoter under surveillance before to his arrest.

Some rookies made news this spring but did not neces make the team. Herzog paid a visit to his minor-league camp the other day and watched David Green, the highly regarded young outfielder who went to the Cardinals from the Milwaukee Brewers' farm system in the trade for Ted Simmons and Rollie Fingers. The manager noted that Green was still learning but added: "How far away is he? About

Language

Sounding the Schwa

By William Safire

NEW YORK — British-born Alistair Cooke, who interprets the United States better than any foreign correspondent since Alexis de Tocqueville, earned his language credentials as a graduate student in American linguistics at Harvard. Accordingly, he is alert to an affectation known to grammarians as "the 🛪 📆 subversion of the schwa." The schwa is a ternational Phooctic Alphabet that looks like an upside-down "e." ...

The schwa is the "... sound of the "a" in "ago," the "i" Saf Safire

e" in "taken" — that neutral sound in an unstressed syllable that is best expressed in letter form

English likes to change the proounciation of vowels in unstressed syllables to the schwa: the "a" in "czar" sounds like "ah," but the second "a" in "Caesar" — in an unstressed syllable - is "uh." That's not a mistake — that's the way we speak the language.

Speakers overly concerned with correctness, bowever, err in disdaining the schwa. Cooke deplores the procunciation "of radio and announcers and commentators who bave decided that English, like Spanish, gives equal stress to all vowels. So that the commonest of all English spoken vowels (the ocurral "or" — in the International Phonetic Alphabet, the upside down 'e') is being banished."

Cooke noted the new pronunciauon of the name of John Chancellor, anchorman of "NBC Nightly News." For most of his life. Chan-cellor was called "Chance-luh." (The last syllable is a schwa.) But Chancellor always pronounced it with three syllables and the "r." making it sound halfway between "Chance-uh-ler" and "Chance-uh-lor," Recently, the NBC announcers have been saying "Chance-uh-lorr." This prompted Cooke to write his journalistic colleague a

"As you know," says the literate anchorman, "announcers like to pronounce every syllable. As a result, the emphasis became a little too strong on the last syllable, even for me. I've talked to them about it, and the situation seems to have been resolved."

What do you do when some wise guy corrects your English? I say. "Gee, thanks," and write a column about it profiting bandsomely thereby, while muttering, "Miserable nitpicker." under my breath.

The Nitpickers League will recall a gibe in this space about President Reagan's pronunciation of "liaison" as "LAY-izon." rather than the correct "LEE-a-zon" or "lec-A-zon."

A few days after that appeared, the president was talking to a group of congresswomen. Some-one told me the other day," he recalled, "by actual count, that I bave met with, in these couple of months, more than 350 of the members of Congress in an effort to have a liaison, and — "He stopped himself. "You ootice I said liaison," be said, pronouncing it "LEE-a-zon." "I was takeo to task in the press the other day for calling it 'LAY-i-zon.' He confessed his guilt, and explained the source of his mispronunciatioo: "The Army bas some words of its own. Arabian Railway Back on Track

Most of H ... Line Was Destroyed by Lawrence of Arabia in World War I

By Dovle McManus Les Angeles Troits Service

DAMASCUS — Sixty-four years after Lawrence of Arabia and his Bedouin raiders put it out of commission, the Hejaz Railway is expected to roll

Built by German engineers at the command of Ottoman Sultan Abdul Hamid II to carry Moslem pilgrims and Turkish soldiers to the holy city of Mecca, the nar-row-gauge line was one of the marvels of its age when it opened in 1908.

It snaked through 950 miles of wasteland inhabited by comadic Bedonins who ambushed the trains so frequently that wealthy passengers bought seats in the rear cars to increase their chances of bopping out and getting away. The line was the main prize of the World War I Arabian campaign. The Turks were allied with Germany, but their hold on their Arab colonies depended oo a string of army garrisons supplied by the rail line. If the railroad could be cut the Turks, faced with a crumbling empire, might be neutralized.

Description of Attack

T.E. Lawrence and his Arab rebels spent two years blowing up trains and bridges, and contributed to the breakup of the

Ottoman Empire. In "Seven Pillars of Wisdom," Lawrence described ooe attack

this way: "We waited bungrily for the train to appear. . . The en-gines, looking very big, rocked with screaming whistles into view around the bend. Behind them followed 10 boxwaggons, crowded with rifle muzzles at the windows and doors; and in little sand-bag oests oo the roofs the Turks precariously held oo to shoot at us. . . . "I raised my band. . . . There followed a terrific roar, and the line vanished from sight behind a spouting column of black dust and smoke a hundred feet high and wide. . . Blowing up trains was an exact science. The Hejaz Railway passed into history. Sand covered much of the track, winds eroded the roached, stations crumbled, Most of the damage done by Lawrence was never repaired.

But oow, in an era when other railroads are dying, the Hejaz line is being reborn. The governments of Syria, Jordan and Saudi Arabia have agreed to rebuild the railway as a modern, standardgauge freight corridor from Damascus to Medina, 210 miles north of Mecca.

One day, a railway buff may be able to board a train in Paris' Gare de Lyon, ride across the Alps and through the Balkans, roll from Istanbul into Asia through the tunnel that the Turks are planning to put under the Bosporus and get off five days later in the deserts of Saudi Ara-

In the center of Damascus, surrounded by bus and automobile traffic, stands a graceful, French-Arabesque railway staand an ornate clock above the central arch that stopped long ago.

The cool, dark entry hall, under an intricately carved ceiling, is empty; the ticket windows are shuttered; grass grows between the rails of the four tracks out in back, beside a platform with a brass bell for ringing out the "All aboard.

But two mornings a week — oo Thursday and Sunday at g a.m. — the old station revives, if only for an bour or two, a little of its past

Never Quite Died

For the Hejaz Railway oever quite died. It still runs, twice a week, between Damascus and Amman, Jordan - a journey only for the intrepid or the stoic because little has changed since Lawrence's day. . On a recent run, five ancient wooden passenger cars set off, creaking behind a German-built steam locomotive that bore the date 1914. The engine hissed and puffed, its whistle screamed, as it built up steam for the trip.

The third-class carriages (fare about $2.10) hoast only wooden benches. Even the shabbily genteel first-class car ($4.50) bas oo toiler; passengers simply squat beside the track whenever the train stops, which is often, some-times at stations and sometimes when an obstinate donkey or camel refuses to leave the track.

The schedule is uncertain. "It is imwise for travelers to count exclusively on this mode of transport," a tourist guidebook

Asked how long it took for the train to reach Amman, the richest agent, an elderly man with a trimmed white mustache and an air of great dignity, said doubt-fully in French, "Five or six... bours. Maybe seven." (It is a four-hour ride by car.)

Changes in Bedonin Life

The Bedouins have changed since the days of Lawrence. In Sandi Arabia, Jordan and Syria, more Bedouins now live in houses than in tents. And the carnel is giving way to the car, the bus and the pickup truck.

Dawn Chatty, an anthropologist at the University of Califorms. Los Angeles, who spent several years living with the Syrian Bedouins, said: "The Bedouins used to use varieties and attributes of camels as terms of praise. They would call a man 'as steady as a ghazala, a kind of camel that is known for its dependabitity. Now they refer to cars. They say someone is as strong as a Mercedes, as beautiful as a Buick or as strong as a Toyota pickup." The mineral that has revived the Hejaz Railway, as it has transformed the rest of the Middle East is oil Saudi Arabia's great increase in oil earnings since 1973 has set into motion a huge development program and a giant surge in im-ports from the West.

All those goods had to be transported to the desert king-dom, but until recently Saudi Arabia's ports were ill-equipped to handle the volume. In 1976, ships at the western port of Jidda waited an average of 120 days to unload. As a result, the Saudis shifted much of their imports to air freight, despite its added cost, and went on a crash program of port construction. Also, thousands of long-distance trucks rolled from Western Europe through Turkey and, following ancient caravan routes, south to the oil sheikhdoms. But the imports keep increasing. And, as the head of the Saudi railway authority, Faisal Shehail, pointed out, It is still cheaper to ship freight via rail

Syria and Jordan are fending again, but they have managed to agree that it is time to rebuild the railway. The Syrians hope their small Mediterranean ports - Latakia and Tartus - might become profitable entry points for Saudi imports, and the Jordanians would like to use Syria's ports for their exports.

The three governments are still arguing over who will pay the approximately $1.4 billion construction cost and how the ownership of the line will be shared. But the fact that Syria and Jordan are quietly discussing these issues — while their governments buri abusive propaganda at each other — is evidence, Arab officials like to say, that the Arabs. turity in their diplomacy.
